Portfolio Review

Equity markets continued the trend from Q4 2011 when recording positive gains in the first quarter of 2012. The FTSE World index gained over 9% for euro investors, while the High Alpha Fund captured a significant proportion of the market's return despite maintaining a cautious fund position with a Q1 return of +5.8%.

The fund started the year with net long positions in equities of circa 33% and a short position in German bonds of approximately 7.5%.

During the first two weeks of January we bought Italian government bonds on the basis they would be a significant beneficiary of the 3 year long term refinancing operations announced by the ECB in December. We also added to our position in Japanese equities and mining stocks and initiated a long position in European banks.

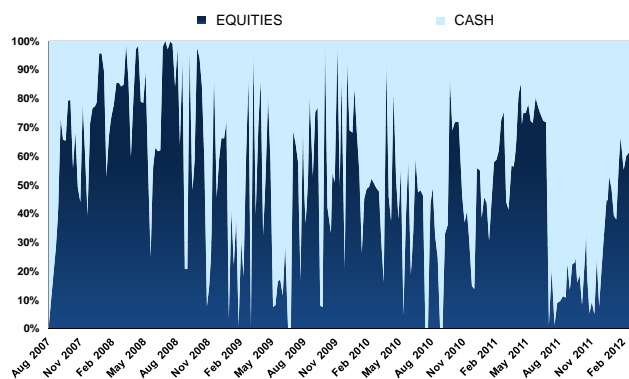

Based on the belief that core bond markets were not reflecting the improvement in outlook indicated by the rise in equity markets we opened a pair trade to try capture this apparent anomaly by going short German government debt and short US equities.

As markets continued to rally throughout February we took profit on our European banks position. We opened a short position in the Yen against the US Dollar based on technical indicators signalling Yen weakness was likely. Towards the end of February we further reduced our long equity exposure and initiated a short position in US equities.

Following the brief correction in equity markets in early March, we opened long positions in some US mining stocks which had sold off significantly more than the market. The fund finished the quarter with a market neutral position in equities and a short position in German bonds of circa 19%.

Given the on-going uncertainty, in Europe in particular, we anticipate a continuation in the volatility we have seen in financial markets and will look to exploit opportunities within this volatility as they present themselves.
